

Dear Riot,

As a computer science student at The University of Texas at Austin, I have been exposed to different topics from classes such as algorithms to software design to organizations such as Mobile App Development and Information and Systems Security Society, creating a foundation of knowledge from which I can grow and learn. I am always willing to try a new language or library or read up on a new trend in technology and understand how it works from a broad and detailed perspective.

During my recent internship at Privasera, a security startup, I was put in charge of creating a vital feature that would enable the product to scale across multiple servers and manage increasing loads. Furthermore, I helped add tests for the code base and integrated testing into the development pipeline. Through these experiences I was able to learn about how to architect and communicate large projects that interacted with the existing codebase. I've learnt so much and hope to be able to translate these skills into my future work.

I particularly hold Riot Games dear to my heart. I have invested and poured countless hours of my life into League of Legends, not only because of its addictive gameplay and friendly atmosphere, but also because of the great care and love put into the game and surrounding products and services by the people that work there. The passion for gaming and commitment to creating a unique experience for its customers is evident in the employees and is one of the main reasons League has attracted me and so many other gamers. Additionally, I appreciate Riot's outlook to engineering. I really enjoy reading Riot's engineering blogs and seeing how you solve the issues of scale and compatibility that come with such a large user base spread across so many platforms and regions. The willingness to use the tools that are best suited to the task and create new solutions for easier development or unsolved problems have resulted in a great foundation for future work and services that I would love to be a part of. I align strongly with these ideals and goals and want to be a part of future Riot solutions that could have their own blog entry. I believe that I would be a great fit at Riot and I hope you do as well.

Sincerely,
Abbas Ally aka xxmarinekingxx
abbasally5@yahoo.com